

Eating A Peach Sky

Jenna Ransom

August 27 - September 26, 2021

Opening Friday August 27, 6-8 p.m.

Marvin Gardens and Best Western are pleased to announce the opening of "Eating A Peach Sky" a solo exhibition by Brooklyn based artist Jenna Ransom. This is the artist's first exhibition with the gallery.

The show consists of nine carefully painted canvases that pace the viewer at a slowed down experience. The paintings are made with a technique of layering and wiping which blurs and softens edges and lines. Ransom's use of layering many light tints over dark adds a meditative feeling to the paintings by way of their stillness and self-contained light. There isn't an apparent outside light source on the rendered forms, rather these paintings are their own light, as if they are a source of quiet and steady energy.

The fuzzy or vibrating lines and backgrounds in these paintings is somewhat like the buzz or hum of nature. And indeed the abstracted image-structure of the work is largely foliage, grass-like, and floral. The title of the show again suggests time and natural processes by introducing the idea of ingesting and digesting sustenance and nourishment whether object or idea.
